The Effect of Staff Rotation and Incentives on Worker Performance: Evidence from Microfinance Groups in Uganda

The Managerial Economics & Decision Sciences Department at the Kellogg School of Management is offering one research assistant position as of April 29th, 2019. The position is aimed at supporting project needs for two ongoing field experiments in Uganda, run by Erika Deserranno (assistant professor at Northwestern), Miri Styrjan (assistant professor at Ben Gurion University) and Lame Ungwang.

The ideal candidate is a Master or PhD student interested in research and has a good grasp of working with data and STATA in particular. Further specifics are provided below:

Potential Tasks:

- Cleaning, preparation, and basic analysis of administrative data;
- Questionnaire coding and document preparation;
- Support the project with administrative tasks;
- Carrying out literature review related to the project(s);
- Maybe: Help with project management in the field (Kampala, Uganda). But this is mostly up to the Research Assistant.